Teacher beaten over mistaken police action

Vadodara: A woman running tuition classes at her home on Dabhoi Road was beaten by a group of people in her neighbourhood over a confusion of calling a PCR van.

The tuition teacher Kishori Mer had called a PCR van to complain against her neighbours over a petty fight on February 6. The PCR van could not find Mer's building and the cops could not hear her voice on phone call. Due to miscommunication, the cops assumed that Mer had complained against DJ being played in the locality beyond permitted time limit.

Police went to the party and asked the organizers to shut down the DJ as they had received complaint from Mer. Meanwhile, Mer also reached the other building block to guide the cops towards her home. However, by then revellers were infuriated by the police action and they pounced upon Mer and beat her up in cops' presence. The policemen tried to intervene, but the attackers outnumbered them. A while later, the attackers retreated as police showed their force. Mer then started walking towards her building block along with cops and attackers again beat her up and hurled abuses at her. Second time, Mer managed to video record the violence in her phone. But when the accused realized that she was recording, one of them snatched her phone and damaged it.

The mob was dispersed again by police and Mer was asked to register a police complaint. She lodged the case on Monday after the data from her damaged phone was retrieved. Cops have booked Salma, Anjum, their husbands and four other unidentified persons for rioting and assault. Police went to the party and asked the organizers to shut down the DJ as they had received complaint from Mer. Meanwhile, Mer also reached the other building block to guide the cops towards her home. However, by then revellers were infuriated by the police action and they pounced upon Mer and beat her up in cops' presence.
